Chirarakika gave himself to thinking, whether it was correct for him to blindly obey his father's order, or was it better to let go off his mother for the sake of sentiments. The time that this boy took in thinking threadbare this matter, ultimately proved helpful. The father's anger cooled down, and the father realised his mistake. He came to know, that the suspicion that made him to ask his obedient son to kill the mother, was totally unfounded. The moral of this story from the Mahābhārata, is that by controlling our outgoing tendencies, we ultimately arrive at better understanding of ourselves.

The Yama and Niyamas provide a conditioning that aids deeper thinking.

First destruction, and then construction, seems to come out right in this context. Breaking of old habits to stop acting in a compulsive manner, provides a chance to look at oneself, to gain in steadiness. Of course, these acts of restraints must go on forever.

In fact, a Yogi is much concerned with his interaction with the society, because this happens to be the functioning base of karma. The effect of the earlier karma and the subsequent vāsanās, trouble the yogi as he ascends the higher levels of consciousness. It has been said about this aspect of karma, that we get entangled with karma as soon as we involve ourself in physical work, which invariably causes hurt to someone. So long as we remain physically busy in doing even our duties, we create karma. The complexity of karma however varies.

ABOUT COMMENTARIES ON THE YOGASUTRA

by RAM SHANKAR BHATTACHARYA

There are over twenty-five commentaries in Sanskrit on the Yoga sūtra of Patañjali and on the Bhāṣya on the Yoga sūtra by Vyāsa. However, the existence of a commentary before the Vyāsabhāṣya may be inferred from the sentence 'tathā ca vyākhyaṇam' in Bhāṣya I.43 (vide Bhikṣu’s comment on it).

According to me, Vyāsabhāṣya was composed within 150 years after the Buddha who died in 502 B.C. or in 544 B.C.

The commentary Tattvavaiśāradī on the Vyāsabhāṣya by Vācaspati (9th century) is one of the most important commentaries, for it explains the text in the clearest way.

A commentary on the Vyāsabhāṣya not so far known is known to ‘Saṅkara’ who is a commentator on Vyāsabhāṣya. The name of this commentary is Vīvarana. Under Yoga-sūtra I.24, the Vīvarana quotes the explanation of the word nimitta as given by a commentator. Though the explanation is found in the Tattvavaiśāradī of Vācaspati, yet it may be supposed to belong to another commentary not known to us. The Vīvarana quotes the view of a commentator on the word bhūmi (Vyāsabhāṣya 1.1) and on the word artha (Vyāsabhāṣya 3.6) both of which are not found in the same form in the Tattvavaiśāradī.

The commentary Vīvarana by Saṅkara on the Vyāsabhāṣya has been published in the Madras Government Oriental Series. According to me, it is not the work of the great Saṅkaracārya but of Saṅkaracārya who composed the Jayamangala commentary on the Śāmkhyakārikā and the commentary on the Adhyātmapaṭala section in the Aparasimha Dharmaśūtra. Yogadṛṣṭikā, a commentary on the Vyāsabhāṣya by Vijñānabhaikṣu was composed in the 16th century.

Al-Brûni’s (973-1050 A.D.) — Arabic version of the Yoga-sūtra, is to be found in ‘Risāla fi fihrisṭ kutub Muḥammad ibn Zakariya’al-Razi’, the relevant part of which was published by E. Sachau in 1876-78. Al-Biruni’s ‘India’ contains clear references to his translations of the Yogasūtra. The commentary on the Yogasūtra used by Al-Biruni cannot be identified with any of the commentaries known to us. Recently an English translation of Al-Biruni’s Arabic version has been prepared by two scholars, namely Schlomo Pines and Tuvia Gelblum and the translations of the first two chapters of the Yogasūtra have been published in the Bulletin of the School of the Oriental and African Studies, University of London (Vol. XXIX, Part 2 and Vol XL Part 3).

The vṛtti called Rājamārtanda by the King Bhoja is of the 11th century A.D. Bhāvāganēśa, disciple of Bhiksū, wrote a commentary Dīpikā on the Yogasūtra. Rāghavānanda who belonged to the 16th century wrote a sub-commentary on the Tattvavādāradā by Vācaspati. Nārāyaṇatīrtha who lived in the closing years of the 17th century and the beginning of the 18th century wrote two commentaries, namely Siddhāntacandrākī and Arthabodhini on the Yogasūtra. (The second is a small commentary showing the meaning of the sūtras only).

Rāmānandayati who lived in the 17th century wrote a commentary Yoganāṇiprabhā. Yaśovijaya, a Jain commentator of the 18th century, wrote a commentary only on a few sūtras (26 in all) in all the four chapters of the Yogasūtra.

Nāgojiḥatā or Nāgośabhaṭṭa (1674-1754 A.D.) wrote one large commentary called Chhāyā and a small commentary on the Yogasūtra. Devatīrtha (or Kāṣṭhajihva) Svāmīn who lived in the 19th century and was patronised by His Highness Iśvarinārayaṇa Sing, the grandfather of the present king or Kāli, wrote Yogatārāṅga, which explains a few Yogasūtras, and was published in his life time in 1856.

Brahmaśri Satyadeva, who died about 50 years ago, wrote a commentary Yogaratna. Kālivara Vedānta-vāgīśa, who also died about 50 years ago, wrote a short commentary Patañjalayogasūtra-vṛtti. Svāmīn Hariharānanda Aranya who died on 19-4-1947 wrote a commentary Bhāṣaṭī on Vyāsabhāṣya and Yogakārikā, a commentary in verse on the Yogasūtra. (The author has founded a school and his monastery has published a few valuable works on Šāṅkhyā and Yoga.) Svāmīn Īnānānanda who died about 12 years ago wrote a larger commentary on the Yogasūtra.

WEEKLY YOGA HEALTH CAMPS

The sick and the seekers of a better way of life may now join short residential camps at The Yoga Institute. Topics covered include relaxation, mental discipline, yoga āsanas, prāṇāyāmas, dietetics and spiritual guidelines. Residents are practically initiated in such a better way of life. Special hostel arrangements for men and women are provided so also medical assistance and wholesome food. It has been found that such camps help students in controlling chronic psychosomatic ailments like diabetes, asthma, rheumatism, gastric disorders, hypertension, etc. Life in such camps aids in checking psychiatric disturbances, and is useful in infusing a yoga attitude to life. Research carried out on these principles for the Ministry of Health in 1970 revealed 82% percent improvement.

Persons desirous of joining the camp may register their names by paying in advance per week Rs. 100 or Rs. 50 per day, for board, lodge and tuition. The applicants may mention the camp they wish to join beginning every second Saturday of each month. On receipt of their letters, they will be informed the date they are to join the Camp. Telephone 532185.
